What can I Do with a Major in... Masters of Business Administration

Profession Overview:

"MBA" stands for Master of Business Administration – it is the graduate-level business administration degree. Some schools offer the program as stand-alone, but many students complete an MBA program with concentration or focus in areas such as Accountancy, Finance, International Business, Marketing or Business Communications.

MBA programs usually require lots of group work, research and projects. Students complete projects in group settings to simulate a real-work environment. Some programs require students to complete a thesis project in the end – students research a topic of interest and present it to a group of peers, faculty members, and members of the business community. Coursework will be an expansion of undergraduate concepts, including finance, leadership, organizational behavior, marketing, management, and using computers in business.

“We are well recognized for delivering first-rate graduate education in our accredited programs to those interested in extraordinary quality and affordable cost. Our programs are designed for students from a wide variety of backgrounds including the liberal arts, sciences, education, law, business and other fields.

The core curricula in our graduate programs emphasize functional skills in business and public administration. In addition to the core, students gain advanced knowledge in salient perspectives such as managing diversity, innovation, responding to changing environments, team building, social issues management and global issues.

The practical side of our curricula is accentuated by the many executives and leading managers of private, public and nonprofit organizations who share their expertise with students and who help explain and illustrate the application of pertinent concepts. Students receive not only a hands-on working knowledge of business and public administration concepts, but they also receive a life-long approach to learning.”—Anderson School of Management: www.mgt.unm.edu
